RE:MEMENTO
White Shadow

SHARD OF DAWN: THE FALL OF THE GODS

After the gods of Mateh achieved victory in war, they faced the 'Archetype of Night,' a scar upon the world created by dimensional rifts.
Realizing that witches would inevitably return, plunging Mateh once more into chaos, the gods made a solemn choice.
From their sanctuary—the Cradle of the Gods—they fragmented and sealed the soul of Pleione, the mother of all witches.
Even knowing this would lead to their eternal disappearance, the gods willingly sacrificed themselves for their descendants.
These sealed fragments containing Pleione's essence became known as the Shard of Dawn

THE WHITE SHADOW AND MOON SHADOW

In the aftermath of the gods' disappearance, individuals bearing fragments of divine memory emerged during Mateh's brief peace.
Known as "Nemonics," these beings stood as humanity's sole defense against encroaching darkness, possessing inherited memories from the gods.
However, humanity succumbed once again to lingering desires, corrupted by the greed and thirst for power sown by the witches' remaining influence.
Those who fell formed a group known as Moon Shadow, committing unspeakable acts and eventually facilitating the resurrection of witches, intent on bringing Pleione herself back into Mateh.

PHAROS, THE WHITE LIGHTHOUSE

As conflict raged endlessly over the Shard of Dawn, humanity needed new defenders against Moon Shadow's relentless assaults.
Gathering like-minded Nemonics, a visionary leader established Pharos, a mighty fortress utilizing ancient technology granted by divine knowledge.
Equipped with formidable defenses, Pharos effectively resisted Moon Shadow's incessant attacks, safeguarding the Shard of Dawn from falling into enemy hands.
Despite prolonged warfare, Moon Shadow was ultimately forced to concede defeat and temporarily faded from history's view.
